EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF ST. ANDREW ST. ANDREWS.

THE present EPISCOPAL CHURCH at ST. ANDREW'S is now quite incapable of meeting the rapidly increasing demand for Seats, and, under the circumstances, it is proposed to quit the present structure, and to erect a new one upon a more commodious site.
For many centuries St. Andrews was the ecclesiastical metropolis of Scotland, is still the seat of her oldest University, and a chief centre of her educational institutions, besides being one of the most frequented Watering Places in the Kingdom. Upon these and other accounts, it was felt that the Church to be erected should not only be spacious, but an ornament to the ancient city,—so full of ecclesiastical and historical recollections. The alumni of the University in particular in all quarters of the world, and others who have derived either relaxation or instruction from residence in St. Andrews, are earnestly requested to contribute to the good work, towards which the sum of £1,800 has already been received from Members of the Church in this country, and other sources. The foundation stone of the building was laid on the 31st of July, 1867, and the structure has already made considerable progress, but funds are still much wanted, and the Incumbent and Vestry appeal with confidence to their countrymen in distant lands, who have a prospect of returning to their own with riches and honour, to assist in the erection of this building, to be dedicated to God's holy worship.
Subscriptions will be thankfully received by,—

Thousands have gazed amid breathless silence at the almost seeming impossible flight through mid-air of this aerobatic wonder, who actually flies the distance of upwards of 140 feet from Pedestal to Pedestal, and, what is still more wonderful, turning two somersaults on the voyage.

HONGKONG, APRIL 1ST, 1868.

An anti-climax indeed, but one we may well be willing to tolerate, is likely, according to the last news from Japan, to be the end of the last outrage in Japan. It is hinted that the native Government may have to dispense for the ferocity of the men who murdered the French sailors at Sakai, by paying a pecuniary indemnity! "Love rules the camp, the court, the grove," says the romantic poet, and the satirist adds, "Or it love don't, cash does, and 'cash alone."

"How beast-ous are zoologists, how charming shots
"Continuing inquis, bags of dollars, coins—"

What wrong cannot be made right by an appropriate payment? Do not the laws of our great and glorious country put a price on every civil grievance, from a breach of contract to a breach of promise on almost every personal injury, from black eyes to domestic

"This pill will save
Will knit and break religions, bless the accursed,
Make the innocent the leper, place the leper innocent,
And give them title, knee, and appendation,
With senators on the bench."

Timon makes a variety of other observations, many of which might be appropriate, but some of which illustrate the freedom of speech in which Divine Williams indulged, too remarkably for repetition here. A pecuniary indemnity—so many "hoos" for every sob which broke from those manly breasts round the graves of the murdered sailors! There is something ludicrous in the notion, but we are not prepared to denounce it seriously, after all. It is very possible that if the outrage at Sakai should be regularly compromised by a payment from the Japanese, many persons will scoff freely at the heartless and mercenary behaviour of the French Government or its representatives; but it is very difficult,—and this difficulty explains many of those legal arrangements concerning damages which open the door to so much sarcasm,—to say what can be done in cases like this, except to demand a pecuniary indemnity. It would certainly be much more painful to see the French authorities in Japan bring dishonour upon the European name, by committing some brutal outrage by way of retaliation. Anything would be better, because nothing could possibly be worse, than the fulfilment of the threat said to have been made in the excitement of the moment, when the outrage was first committed, about hanging a number of Japanese to the yard-arms of the French ships. If damages do not act successfully as an ointment to the wounded feelings in all cases, it is simply because there is no such thing as undoing wrongs of some kinds after they are once committed. The seamen of the Duplcix, who have lost comrades they may have cared for, cannot have them back again now, and it is to be hoped they would not be permanently happier for knowing that besides the Frenchmen who were murdered at Sakai, a number of innocent Japanese had been slain in cold blood afterwards.

The most substantial objection to the practice of demanding indemnities in China and Japan, whenever European governments have a difficulty with the government of those countries, is that it encourages a belief in the sordid and mercenary nature of European, while the Chinese and Japanese are said to hold to a large extent, and which, though very far from being well founded, has a good deal of superficial evidence in its support. We have been assured by some people, who have had better opportunities than those which fall to the lot of most people here, for comprehending the feelings of high class Chinese, that the ruling dignitaries believe Europeans to care for nothing in the world but dollars. It is perceived that we are strong, but it is supposed that whatever that strength is put forward, it is simply in order that we may be,—so to speak,—paid to go away, like Italian organ-grinders. Opium was destroyed at Canton; it had to be paid for. War was made to enforce payment; that had to be paid for too. War was made in Japan; that had to be paid for. The British Government, (as the Chinese would look at the matter,) sent out ships of war—SHERARD OSBORN'S fleet—on sale or return, but hampered with impossible conditions, and the mistakes made, had to be paid for by the Chinese government. For the privilege of employing Europeans in their custom houses, the Chinese had to pay very handsomely, and now, in order to send a representative to Europe and America they have to pay tremendous sums again. When they find out how much one their new ambassador will be to them, they may have their unfortunate belief in the motives that inspire every act of Europeans considerably strengthened. Now, in Japan we insist on the opening of the new ports, the Japanese authorities foresee trouble, the trouble comes and the Europeans concerned declare that the Japanese must pay once more. On the other hand, it is impossible to leave the relations and dependents of men who may be murdered in this unprovoked manner by the Japanese, without some pecuniary compensation, imperfect as that may be, looked at in the light of a consolation. It would, furthermore, be absurd to require that France or England should pay such compensation from their own exchequers whenever an outrage might be committed in Japan. Perhaps, the best remedy for an affair as would be one by which the families of the murdered men would be abundantly compensated at the expense of the Japanese government (which could easily assess the payment on the Daimio in whose territory the outrage was committed), while it should be made plain that the French Government did not demand anything itself in the nature of damages. Its object would simply be the punishment of the murderers,—not an indiscriminate slaughter of the Japanese in a colossal vendetta, but the solemn execution of the actual persons guilty of the murder. The foreign representatives were following a right principle when they insisted in the first instance, in the case of the attack at Kobé, on the apprehension of the officer responsible for the firing. The mistake they made was in carrying out the idea too far, and in throwing away a fine opportunity for a good dramatic effect on the Japanese mind, which might have tended to prevent the repetition of outrages in future. The affair at Sakai is of a very much deeper dye, and we do not assert for a moment that if the criminals in that case can be discovered, or let us rather say when they are discovered, should be pardoned. But if they are executed, and the friends of the murdered men liberally compensated, the French authorities would be doing very wrong in exacting any smart-money.

In all, or nearly all the people who make tripalaom China, would put together accounts thereof as good, or nearly as good, as that which we extract to-day from one of the papers in the North, a very much more complete idea of the Chinese empire than that which any of us have at present, would very soon be obtained. There are a very large number of people who have travelled about this country, many particular persons who probably know particular districts intimately well, in spite of the fact that they are quite unknown to the generality of foreign residents. Such persons, however, very likely know nothing beyond the district of their own choice. Their travels have not put them in the position of being really well informed about the topography of the country, and has not contributed in the slightest degree to the general stock of knowledge. It is not necessary, that people should have the art of writing well or brilliantly in order to produce little narratives of travel which might be useful. A distinct result is obtained by reading any honest and straightforward account of a trip through an unknown, or little known country, even if it merely consist of a plain description of the places passed through, and the scenery on the route. It helps to make so much of the map less blank and unmeaning than it was before.

Mrs. Marion Gard v. Mrs. J. Rosa da Luz.

This was another of those amusing cases, wherein the persons concerned bring themselves in to public notice in a most unfavourable light. It seems strange that, considering the very small amount of satisfaction to be gained by fighting in a police court, people in a certain position should invariably resort to the magistrate to settle their quarrels. Here we have Mrs. Marion Gard, lately residing as a boarder at No. 12, Aberdeen-street, summoning her landlady, Mrs. Johanna Rosa da Luz, for assaulting and beating her, and tearing her dress.

When the whole of the parties arrived in court, there was really a formidable body, on one side of the bench being the defendant and three European female witnesses, on the other side the complainant and her female witness. Mr. Gard, a very lady-like looking person, said she was a boarder at No. 12, Aberdeen-street, of which Mrs. Rosa da Luz is the proprietress. She had lived with her at the establishment for No. 12 for some three months and a half. On Monday, the 23rd ult., the fine signs were shown, that the peace and good will of the house was likely to be broken. On that fatal day, about half-past nine in the morning, a message was brought to complainant from the defendant to the effect that if she did not clear out of the house at her home at No. 12, a police officer would be sent to accelerate her movements. What was the reason for such a message the complainant was quite at a loss to understand, she thought that it might possibly be, because she had been absent for three days (she did not say where), and that the defendant was anxious for her getting to do with the occupation of her apartments, but to her great astonishment, she discovered them to be locked. She then went down into the defendant's room intending to speak to her, but was deferred knowing that besides the Frenchmen who were murdered at Sakai, a number of innocent Japanese had been slain in cold blood afterwards.

...an Inland Journey from Shanghai to Foochow.

(from the "Shanghai Recorder.")

Presuming that the journey from here to Hangchow is tolerably familiar to the majority of your readers, I propose to give a rough sketch of our progress from that city through the provinces of Chekiang, Kiangsu and Fokien to Foochowfoo. I may here state that our party consisted of three, besides a native interpreter.

On the evening of Monday, the 20th January, we left Hangchow in a Chinese passenger boat, intending to proceed up the Sin river Tsiantang as far as Lanchi. Our condition proved not altogether enviable, as there were no less than five native passengers in close proximity with ourselves—one, an opium-smoker—and who, as they seemed never to stir from their beds in the whole course of the four and twenty hours, did not contribute much towards the purification of the atmosphere, to say nothing of the general dirt and discomfort by which we were surrounded. The scenery, however, amply compensated us for any domestic inconveniences to which we were subjected. The stream winds through richly wooded heights that enclose it on all sides, and for a long distance exclude all view of the adjacent country. On the following Wednesday, we approached a pass which seemed celebrated in that part, and which certainly was most striking. For sixty miles rugged mountains whose peaks were lost in the clouds rose precipitously from the edge of the water, while the river is so fortunate as to appear completely land locked. It is also very shallow, and the rapids are numerous. The labour of pushing the heavy boat up the steep incline seemed very great, as the strength of the current impeded it with considerable force. Luckily, however, we had a strong wind in our favour, and what with sailing, pushing, tugging and yulo-ing, we came along as well as possible under the circumstances.

When we arrived at Lanchi, we entered into a fresh agreement with our lowdah to take us on as far as the city of Kinhwafoo. The weather now was intensely cold, and the morning we started again, we had a sharp snow storm. Then, as we moved onward, the country changed; gentle undulations took the place of the abrupt ridges we had been accustomed to, and long stretches of shingly beach lined the river at intervals. Wild-duck, pheasants, and geese, abound here in the most surprising quantities; they are wonderfully tame, and I do not hesitate to say, that the whole distance from Hangchow to the borders of the province is one of the most magnificent shooting-grounds conceivable. It is impossible to take an hour's walk without turning up pheasants under your very feet, and the river literally teems with wild-duck, to say nothing of occasional coveys of snipe. One day we started a fox.

The scenery on this part of the river, called, I believe, the Yung-po, is very pleasing, from its pre-eminently un-Chinese-like character. Well kept, pretty villages of full white houses everywhere meet the eye, half-hidden by graceful palm-shaped trees; verdure and spreading foliage surround one, and almost call to mind the jungle of the jungle in upper Bengal. The weather gradually became milder as we proceeded south, and the wind still favouring us, we sped steadily on our way. The rapids, however are numerous, and very strong; but the manner in which the boatmen bring the boats over them, is perfectly marvellous.

On Sunday evening, the 27th January, we arrived at the important city of Kinchowfoo. Here we met with the first instalment of that terrible "nothing" which was so great a nuisance to us from that time forward. Villages we found harmless enough, and invariably civil; but the townfolk were very apt to terrify the inferior they felt in us by noisy little demonstrations in the shape of stones and similar missiles. Our boat was absolutely besieged, and if ever we ventured to land it was only to be hot-pressed by a rabble of all the filthiest and most repulsive creatures in the town. Being new-year's time, too, we were unable to procure boats for the further prosecution of our journey, and were, therefore, compelled to apply for assistance to the leading mandarin of the place. (Shall's being engaged, we sent on, immediately return to her home at Ningpo, escorted by the most disorderly, fighting, eager crowd, it had, until then, ever been our lot to witness; we have seen many worse since. After a short time we arrived at the Yamun, and were very courteously received by the Fuh Tai, an official of the blue button, who immediately issued the requisite order to obtain for us a couple of small boats. Coming back, we naturally had a row with the chair coolies about payment, but were most considerably forced. Luckily, however, we succeeded the hills around Foochow, the successful completion of our enterprise in no way lessening the pl sure we felt at finding ourselves once more on the land of the living.

The Queen and State.

(From the "Times.")

The British public will be rejoiced to hear that the Queen trusts she may be equal to make still further efforts in the discharge of her royal duties. It is announced that a step will be taken this season in advance of the limited Courts by which her Majesty was last year feeling her way back to the old state of things. Besides announcing a Court for official personages and their families, the days are appointed for three drawing-rooms, in which her Majesty will remain as long as a proper regard for the health and strength will allow, one of the Princesses taking her place when it shall be necessary. This may immediately concern very few. Even supposing these drawing-rooms as numerously attended as they used to be in the brighter years of this reign, and, indeed, to be restricted by nothing but the accommodations of Buckingham Palace, happily larger than those of St. James's, it is only the Court circle that is directly interested, and that circle, in its largest sense, does not muster many thousands. What are these, it may be asked, to thirty millions? But even these thirty millions have a good deal to say to it. A courtier of the seventeenth century would observe on such an occasion that it made a difference to everybody whether the sun shone or lay somewhere behind a heavy bank of clouds. This is not the day for hyperboles, and even a metaphor is received with suspicion; but it nevertheless does concern the whole country that the principal personage, as well as all the other of every lower degree, shall continually appeal to the evidence of the senses. We presume there is something in all the talk about absentees, about non-resident clergy or squires, about empty mansions, and the carriage-drive that knows not the track of wheels. There is something more, too, than the material interests affected. This British constitution, society, and state becomes a heavy, unintelligible thing when it ceases to be well represented and visibly enacted. Of course there are persons happily far above the necessity of an appeal to their vulgar senses. They know all about it, and don't want to know more. But, as a simple matter of fact, the greater part of mankind only apprehend what they see or what they hear of secondhand in the common talk of the day and through the newspapers. When they hear of a sovereign performing a succession of important or interesting public acts, assisting at ceremonials, taking a part in pageants, presiding over the highest ranks of her subjects, and otherwise appearing as the bright and attractive centre of our political system, they realize what is called royalty, which else they have to understand by the dim and uncertain twilight of their reasoning faculties.

We would not say a word to disparage the intelligence, the information, and the inborn loyalty of the British people. Indeed, were we guilty of that error, we should be rebuked by the simple fact that her Majesty is actually the most popular and, by the ordinary commercial test, the most successful author of the day. The interest of the volumes with which she has favoured the world in entirely personal, or, at least owing to the interest felt by the entire reading public in the personages thus brought before them. Those who feel this unbounded interest in words, letters, excursions, picnics, and such familiar incidents, only distinguished from the every day course of good English life by being royal, will not forget their loyalty under the longest eclipse or any conceivable temptation. But this instinctive sentiment, we submit, ought to be oftener appealed to, more carefully nourished, and made more useful to the State.

Our sovereigns have often appeared as the heads of great causes and the leaders of popular movements, but it does not follow that they had much choice in the matter. While, however, we venture to dispute the vulgar error that the splendour and influence of the Crown have diminished in the course of centuries, and chiefly since the last great settlement of the British Constitution, we cannot forget that in such a system that only lives and flourishes which acts and shows. In a balance of forces, each Power must do its utmost, not for aggrandisement, but for mere sustentation and self-preservation. In the great drama every personage must do his part. Nature herself is one-sided and imperfect when any great element of usefulness or beauty leaves its place void. The most splendid demonstrations fail when there is some one thing wanting. On the other hand, mere persistence, so long as it stands on right, and represents a principle, becomes an actual power. Ambition, and even genius, break in vain against the rock that never moves, much more the wild impulses and shallow caprices of lesser men. What have we said, except that everybody in these days must protect himself, cherish his own interests, and even advance somewhat, if possible? Sovereigns, as a glance at Europe shows, are not exempt from this duty, which is also their right, their glory, and what is more, the only way in which they can confidently hope to leave their thrones to their successors.

A "Peculiar People."

A recent inquest reported in the home papers brings out the views of a remarkable sect. W. Payne was the coroner, and the inquest was held at the Crown Tavern, Blackfriars-road, touching the death of Louis Wagstaffe, fourteen months old.

The deceased was the daughter of "two saints" of the faith called the "Peculiar People." Though a girl, she was named Louis, after a saint of the church. Mrs. Fanny Adley, 16, Princes-street, Blackfriars-road, said that she was a widow, and was one of the "Peculiar People." The deceased was the daughter of Thomas Wagstaffe, a wharf labourer, and Mary Andrews, his wife. The child was always delicate, and it suffered from a cough. The elders of the church were called together and they anointed the child. The ceremony gone through was the pouring of oil out of a phial on to the child's chest. They prayed to the Lord to heal the child and raise it up again. Witness did not suggest the calling in of a doctor, because when she was herself laid low the Lord of all raised her up again. The reason they did not call in a doctor was that Scripture said, "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man;" and also, "Trust not in an arm of flesh." A Juror: Did not Jesus speak of calling in physicians to the sick?—Witness: In what part of Holy Writ do you find that? That juror confessed that he did not know; but he asked the witness, "If your leg was broken, would you call in a doctor, or would you merely pray to the Lord to get it mended?"—Witness: The Lord says, "Not a bone of the righteous shall be broken." Dr. Thomas Donahoo, 19, Westminster bridge-road, said that the parents called upon him for a burial certificate after the child was dead, and of course he refused to give it. He had since, by the coroner's order, made a post-mortem examination. He found that death had resulted from inflammation of the lungs. The disease had been going on for ten days. If medical aid had been called in the child would have had a fair chance of recovery. Brandy and water was highly improper; it would aggravate the disease. Thomas Wagstaffe, the child's father, was then asked for an explanation of his conduct in not getting medical aid for his child. He said, "The reason is, I gave my heart to the Lord six years ago, and I believe that God is of my body. Now, I believe that when I am laid low the Lord will raise me up. Six years ago I believed as the people of the world do. One of the elders of the church will address you upon this." The coroner said the deceased child had lost its life through the fault of the parents in not procuring necessary medical aid, and the offence amounted in law to manslaughter. Elders might leave their own lives to the care of the Lord if they liked, but the lives of children should not be played with. He liked their notion of trusting in the Lord, but in this case they had gone too far.

The jury, after a short consultation, returned a verdict of "Manslaughter against Thomas Wagstaffe and Mary Andrews Wagstaffe." The Coroner said he would take bail for the appearance of the accused at the Central Criminal Court. He fixed the amount at £80 for Wagstaffe and his wife, and two sureties of £40 each. Two members of the sect, but manufacturers, became sureties. An elder said that in Essex, where they had numbers of these cases, Mr. Codd, the coroner, after consulting with the recorder, decided that when they sincerely believed in the Lord, it was not manslaughter. The coroner said that he was of a different opinion, and that he would send the parties to Newgate in future cases, for children's lives should be protected. The age for miracles was past, and they would find that though the gates opened for Paul and Silas, the gates would not open for them when they were in prison. The elder remarked that physic killed a great many people. The saints gained a victory over the people of the world at the end of the case. When they had signed the bail bonds, they refused to pay the usual fees, and as the bonds were signed and accepted, there was no way of compelling them to hand over the money.

Elephant Shooting in Abyssinia.

A correspondent writes in the Times of India:—

"I have just returned from a few days shooting in these mountains, and I have made a most splendid bag. I shot four Elephants, and bagged three enormous ones with magnificent tusks. The other one was shot in the head, neck, and his shoulder smashed to atoms, four of the tusks and two tails have come in already, and young B. has gone out with my Shoho guide to try to bag the wounded one, and bring in the tusks of the third elephant with his tail. I never had such luck in shooting in my life, the herd only consisted of five; and I shot four, bagged three, and only one escaped. I had no aid in the sport. I was accompanied by a Shoho guide, a dhooley wallah and a sepoy, (my orderly) of the Regiment. I went over some terribly rough ground, and up and down some very high mountains. My orderly was knocked up completely, and I had to leave him in the jungle and continue the pursuit of the tracks alone. It was about 2 o'clock P.M. when I came up to the herd and I stalked them for a full hour and got within 10 yards of one of them in dense forest before he saw me. I sent a bullet crashing through his shoulder, and followed it up by planting two others in his head. The rush of the herd was something terrible as they crashed through the jungle levelling every thing before them. I got a fourth shot and brought him down dead. The Shoho crossed the ravine to get near this one that was floored when down came an old Bull Elephant, at full charge upon him; he bolted for his life up the path where I was standing, and the elephant rushing after him roaring like a gigantic lion, with his trunk elevated high in the air. The Shoho in rushing past me nearly knocked me senseless with a spare rifle which he had, and I was within five yards of being crushed to pieces when I planted an Enfield sized bullet from my double-barelled rifle, slick through his brain and dropped him on the spot dead. No sooner had this been done than another saw us and came tearing down upon us as hard as he could, roaring terribly and smashing every thing before him. I received him with a ball in the head, it had no effect; another through his head, low, staggered him and he swerved a little. I gave him the last bullet I had, and he, in dying smashed every thing in all directions into thousands of atoms. He tried to charge up the path where I was, but staggered back and tore down trees and every thing in his way, and then rolled over heavily with a terrible groan. I can assure you I was heartily thankful when it was all over, and that I was out of the row so well. I cannot describe to you the exciting feelings which possessed me, nor the grandeur of the whole sport. It was beyond anything I ever experienced, and I have been in danger before in sporting. I send you a hair or two from each of the tails. The tusks I shall send home to my wife this week, before we get too far from the coast. I calculate the ivory of the four tusks that have already come in to be worth at least Rs. 600. I am the first officer or man in the force that has killed an elephant and three in a day is really wonderful.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Monday Evening.

This has been an extremely quiet day for the Drug Market. Excepting a few small operations on 3rd sales New Patna to arrive at $655½ to $665 hardly any business otherwise has been done. New Benares, $660 to $662½, Malwa $670 to $675, 2nd sales New Patna firm, with no sellers at $655.

Business has been slack to-day, and the markets generally present a dull aspect. In the piece goods market there have been a few sales, but prices remain at much the same level as for the last week. These transactions include 1930 pieces White Shirtings at $4.40 to $6.45, 500 pieces at $3.27, and 1000 pieces common at $2, 1700 pieces, common Singapore cargo, 6lbs. T-Cloths at $1.75, and 60 bales Cotton Yarn, 30 bales each of 28/32 and 38/42, at $140, proportion. For a Newspaper or Price Current via Marseilles, 8 Cents.
Prepayment of the postage is compulsory in each case.
Special attention is directed to the following Rules and Regulations, which will be strictly enforced:—

AS REGARDS BOOKS.
A Book Packet may contain any number of separate Books, Almanacks, Maps, or Prints, and any quantity of paper, vellum or parchment (to the exclusion of letters whether sealed or open); and the Books, Maps, Paper, &c., may be either printed, written, or plain, or any mixture of the three.
All legitimate binding, mounting, or covering of the same or of a portion thereof, will be allowed, whether such binding be lose or attached; as also rollers in the case of prints, markers (whether of paper or otherwise,) in the case of books, and in short whatever is necessary for the safe transmission of literary or artistic matter or usually appertains thereto.
Every book packet must be either without a cover, or in a cover open at the ends or sides. It must not contain any letter, open or sealed, nor any sealed enclosure whatever.
No packet must exceed two feet in length, breadth or depth, exceeding these dimensions it cannot be forwarded through the Post.

AS REGARDS PATTERNS.
They must not be of intrinsic value. This rule excludes all articles of a saleable nature, and indeed, whatever may have a value of its own, apart from its mere use as a pattern; and the quantity of any material sent ostensibly as a pattern must not be so great that it can fairly be considered as having on this ground an intrinsic value.
There must be no writing or marks other than the address of the person for whom the packet is intended, a trade mark and numbers, and prices of the articles; otherwise the Packet will be detained or forwarded charged as an unpaid letter.
The Patterns must be sent in covers open at the ends, so as to be easy of examination. Samples however, of seeds, drugs, and so forth, which cannot be sent in open covers, may be enclosed in bags of linen or other material, tied at the neck; bags so closed that they cannot readily be opened, even although they be transparent, must not be used for this purpose. Non-compliance with this rule will also subject the packet to be detained or forwarded as an unpaid letter.
The decision of the Postmaster General as to the eligibility of any Packet, pattern, or sample contained therein, to be forwarded under these regulations, will be final and conclusive.
In all other respects the general regulations of the Book Post will apply to the Pattern Post. Under these regulations, in order to prevent any interruption to the regular transmission of letters, a Packet of Patterns may, when it is necessary, be kept back for the following Mail, by which, in the ordinary course, it would be forwarded.
The rule which forbids the transmission through the Post of any article likely to injure the contents of the Mail Bags or Boxes, or the person of any Officer of the Post Office is of course, applicable to the Pattern Post; and a packet containing anything of the kind will be stopped, and not sent to its destination. Articles such as the following have been occasionally posted as Patterns, and have been detained as unfit for the Post, viz.: Metal, boxes, porcelain and China fruit, vegetables, bunches of flowers, cuttings of plants, spurs, knives, scissors, needles, pins, pieces of machinery, sharp pointed instruments, samples of metals, samples in glass bottles, pieces of glass, acids of various kinds, curry combs, copper and steel engraving, plates and confectionery of all kinds.

Postmaster General.

Extracts.

The Count of Paris on the German Question.

We give below some of the principal and most interesting passages from the remarkable essay on the German question, lately published by the Count of Paris:—

"German unity, then, may be regarded as a reality. But will Prussia be merged in Germany, or is Germany to be merged in Prussia? This is the important question now at issue. By Prussia I here designate the Prussian Government. A Government with bureaucratic and absolutistic traditions, with an army recruited in a democratic manner, yet in the hands of an essentially aristocratic body of officers; a Government active and intelligent, but with a marked predilection for formality, despotism, and Cæsarism. As to the Prussian people, the first in Europe in point of intellectual culture, industrious, steady, and pervaded with the spirit of association, it is far from identifying itself with a Government so little in harmony with its real instincts.

"On the manner how the question now pending between Russia and Germany is solved depend our future relations to the most powerful neighbour of France. A Germany in which Prussia has been merged would be a nation placed in the centre of Europe, impelled by interest, habits, and ideas, towards liberal institutions; a nation which, perhaps, will give us the example of liberal reform, and is sure to follow us on the path of political progress, should we be so happy as to precede it. It would be a body politic, possessing all social elements requisite for a free country, yet comprising too many and too various interests to become offensive; a nation more military, perhaps, yet less warlike than ourselves. The development of its internal prosperity, the recognition of its legitimate influence, can in process of time become a guarantee of peace. This, I believe, is a prospect which we ought to accept cordially, even though we may miss somewhat the old dismembered condition of Germany. At any rate, we should prefer this combination to the division of Germany between Austria and Prussia. Such a division would have given us for neighbours two Powers ever ready to implicate us in their domestic quarrels, only to desert us in turn for fear of appearing un-German, and ultimately to make common cause against us.

"But a Prussia in which Germany has been merged would be Cæsarism established in Central Europe. The natural tendencies of such a Government, its opposition to the real bent of the German mind, its indifference to the violation of numerous interests, the necessity of lulling liberal aspirations by exaggerated concessions to national pride—all would combine to make it adopt a menacing attitude and pursue a policy of attack towards its neighbours. It would be at once a permanent danger to the peace of Europe and a severe blow inflicted on the liberal cause.

"In what wise will this question be solved? Without offering a premature reply, it is yet possible to resolve the problem into its constituent elements. The Prussian system is strong by the prestige of success, by confidence in the future and the overthrow of all parties opposed to it. Count Bismark's triumph has broken up and disorganized all political sects, not only in Prussia, but in all Germany. He began by undermining the basis on which his own party was founded. He who has restored universal suffrage, has dared to hold out his hand to Italy, and sometimes speaks of the rights of nations, is the declared chief of the Feudal fractions and the Junkers. One can well understand the horror of Prussian Legitimists at the policy of their leader; but, as obedience to the Crown is their supreme tenet, there remained nothing for them but to support the Count while kept in power by the King. Hostile to all they comprise under the generic term of 'revolutionary,' hostile to the kingdom of Italy, hostile even to annexation as practised by their own Government, which must eventually diminish their influence, they found themselves doomed to impotence by the man they had elevated to power. Herr von Bismark next turned against the Liberal party, snatching from it the weapon with which it had contended against him so long. For three years he had withstood the Chambers of Deputies and its liberal majority. Though its constitutional prerogative was trodden under foot by the Minister, the Chamber retorted only with a display of empty verbiage. Having thus proved to the world how weak the Liberals were in point of action, he, one fine morning, seized an opportunity to do more. Looking upon the Liberal ideas as a mania which infects and victimizes the 19th century, he yet perceived the necessity of indulging the popular bent, and for this seeming concession selected the hour of triumph. Shortly after the day of Sadowa, when the country, still excited by the martial impressions of the war, withdrew its votes from the men who had been the most unyielding in the defence of its rights, he asked for a vote of indemnity at the hands of the Parliament. By thus according a tardy respect to their rights, the Prussian Minister converted old opponents into serviceable tools. The Bill was voted, and a rich endowment for the Minister to boot. His next step was a bold appeal to universal suffrage for the election of a Constituante. This blow completed the rout of the Liberals. Having, in their abstract and barren discussions, long ceased to distinguish the essence of political principles from their form, they had so much abused terms like German unity, universal suffrage, &c., that they did not even perceive the snares set them by the Prussian Minister. The party claiming for itself the epithets of National and Liberal was now rendered almost completely subservient to his purposes. The National Association, with its many branch societies, became a blind but well applied instrument in his hands. As to the petty Governments, he guaranteed their existence, but, in the very act, deprived them of the essential conditions of their duration. He compromised their popularity by allotting them a full share of the military burden imposed upon the Prussians, thus trebling their expenditure. When the Duchy of Coburg-Gotha, for instance, concluded a military convention with Prussia a few years previously, the latter only asked 80 thalers, or 300f. per man. The amount was fixed so low, to act as bait, and also because in those days Austria was still in the field as a rival, and, unless outbidding, might have done it cheaper. At present Prussia exacts of the same Duchy 170 thalers, or 637f. 50c. per man. The contingent of the Grand Duchy of Saxe Weimar in the days of the old Bund entailed an outlay of 240,000 thalers, or 900,000f.; the military budget now forced upon it will consume 800,000 thalers, or 3,000,000f. The petty Governments had always endeavoured to oblige their subjects by exempting them from the oppressive taxation weighing down their more powerful neighbours. It was the first solicitude of Prussia to deprive them of this advantage, of this means of prolonging their existence.

"In this unsettled state of things the Prussian system, whose strength has been tested, seems to be a sort of necessity for Germany. Still it will be opposed by two different currents of popular feeling which, very unlike to each other, are yet alike adverse to its final success. In the North there is the anti-centralization movement; in the South there is the growing desire to adhere to the new Bund.

"The anti-centralization movement is easily accounted for. The position acquired by Germany satisfies the national pride. Once having attained to this position people do not perceive the necessity of sacrificing all local traditions, institutions, and interests to complete uniformity with the Prussian system. Thus it is, that even those who were most anxious to bring about the hegemony of Prussia now find it is time to come to a full stop. Annexation to Prussia numbers but few adherents in the petty States since they have been embodied, with or without their consent, with the Northern confederacy. Their capitals are wide awake to the losses that would befall them on becoming the seats of Prussian sous-prefets. Even the Universities, which ever were the centre of the unity movement, will not strike their flags before Berlin. In the minor contingents one meets with jealousy and secret malice against the Prussian army. The numerous bureaucracy know very well that annexation would send them to subordinate offices far from home, while all the higher posts will be filled with Prussians. The masses waver; Prussia seems to be saying to them, 'As you bear the burden of Prussian subjects you had better become Prussians, and have all the contingent advantages.' But the despotic tone of her civil service is dreaded, and the difficulties of all kinds which she encounters in the new provinces do not encourage the advocates of annexation in the neighbouring States. Indeed, the petty Sates are as yet free from the complicated administrative machinery required for the purposes of a centralizing despotism, and were it imposed upon them it would not easily be acclimatized.

"In the Southern States public feeling is running in the opposite direction. There the isolation resulting from the Prague Treaty of Peace is deeply felt. The line of the Main, which Count Bismark was perfectly sincere in establishing, has never been accepted as a bona fide frontier by the German people. It would have been possible only with Prussian sentinels on one, and Austrian picquets on the other bank of the river; but Austria having been expelled from Germany, the Prague proviso only amounts to a sort of penalty inflicted upon the Southern States, from which they must sooner or later be relieved. Would it have been possible for the Southerners to make a stand against Prussian military rule if they had constituted themselves the champions of the Liberal cause, thus imitating the example of Belgium and Switzerland, which border upon more powerful neighbours, but make up for want of strength by the superiority of their institutions? One cannot but doubt it. To display a flag, even that of liberty, a favourable wind is needed; but not a breath of air would have breathed had the South unfurled it in opposition to Prussia. At any rate, their Governments did not for a moment contemplate the idea of so venturesome an experiment. Northern and Southern Germany are but one nation. Not even religion divides them. Just look at the valley of the Rhine and the adjoining provinces. In the South Baden, Darmstadt, and Würtembergers, to a considerable extent, Protestant; in the North, on the other hand, the Rhine Provinces and Westphalia are nearly entirely Catholic. Southern Germany exist by its intimate connexion with the North. Its artificial capitals, Carlsruhe, Stuttgart, Munich; its old Imperial cities, Regensburg, Augsburg, even the industrious Kuremberg, and the scholarly Heidelberg, are insufficient to impart to it a life of its own. Commercially the South is perfectly unable to dissever itself from the North, with its great prosperous emporiums, its industrial centres, and its access to the sea. Even more dependent upon the North is the South in its intellectual life. Everything, then, combines to cause the South to long for reunion with the North. The South is determined to have its will under any circumstances, and rather than remain in its present situation would prefer to accept Prussian supremacy without delay and at any sacrifice. The injudicious demand of a correction of the frontier put by France to Prussia in 1866 has sufficed to prove to the Governments of the Southern States how very much they need the protection of the latter Power, and they have accordingly hastened to place the whole of their military force at its disposal. When left to chose between the reorganization and dissolution of the Zollverein, they have submitted to any terms, among others to the clause entitling Prussia to prohibit, by her vote, any alteration of the tariff. This Customs' Union is but a brief and transitory stage, paving the way to a real union. In the meantime, Berlin enjoys the unique privilege of possessing three Parliaments, representing the three Fatherlands of the modern Prussian—Prussia, his more immediate country; the North German Confederacy, being the political Commonwealth of which Prussia is but a constituent part; and Germany, temporarily disguised as Customs' Union. So artificial a structure cannot last, and the North German Parliament will, at no very distant time, include the representatives of all Germany among its members. For the moment Prussia, it is true, would like to put off the day of this supreme consummation. She has been in a hurry to get the constitution of the Northern Confederacy duly voted, because she did not want to discuss it, except with the States admitted by herself. Other States that may join in future will have to accept it in toto. The Berlin Cabinet dares not openly oppose the movement drawing the South to the North, but it is desirous to delay its taking effect till the time when it will have Prussified the North. It wants to eat the artichoke leaf. It is also well aware that the addition of Southern members to the Federal Council would strengthen the opposition which its proposals already meet with from the Northern Governments, and that, instead of making laws, it might then be placed in the position of having them made for it by others. For this reason we, judging from the French point of view, must wish for complete unity to be speedily accomplished. In all matters of European import unity has been already effected by treaties and still more by the weight of faits accomplis. The Southern armies are henceforth the inevitable auxiliaries of Prussia in any war she may choose to undertake. By complete re-union with the South, Prussia will gain not a single soldier, but encumber herself with an opposition strong enough to counterbalance her predominance in German affairs."
